Abstract: Traditionally, postage stamps have been purchased at post office counters, authorized stamp vendors, or coin-operated vending machines. Business mailers use a postage to print a postal indicia as proof of payment instead of using stamps. The smart card, with its embedded computer, is the key to providing the security needed for a public access postal system. The DES algorithm is encoded on the smart card and in the Smart Postage Dispenser terminal to provide secure access and secure funds management. This paper describes the experimental Smart Postage Dispenser system and the smart cards used in the trial, along with the funds security and funds management arrangements. The system is on trial at Loughborough University, within a general smart card trial organized as a joint effort between GEC Card Technology and Midland Bank. (0 Refs)
